Due to isolation from the mainland, the people of the Sea Islands developed a distinct language and culture of their own. The roots of the Gullah--speaking people have been traced back to the West coast of Africa, and much of the "Rice Coast" culture survives today in the crafts (sweet grass baskets), the language (Gullah, which is still spoken today by many of the native islanders), and the foods (Red rice, Gumbo).

If you , Yearn to Learn about these wonderful Gullah Folks, please join us. Ask your friends and family to join you or come expecting to meet new friends, while having fun and learning together.
